ECHOES OF FIGHT

According to the Advertiser, Dick Cullen thinks when there is anything out of the ordinary going on about the rig during a fight should be announced beforehand. Quite right, Mr. Cullen; quite right, Dick might have gone much farther in his talk, and said a few more things that would clear the cobwebs from the befogged headgear of some of the spectators. Dick says Reilly was so fast he staggered him. Good thing for Cullen the gloves were big eh! Reilly may not be able to hit very hard, but the way he stabbed, jabbed and ripped through Cullen's guard Wednesday night it looks as though he would have cut Mr. Cullen's face to ribbons, had they been fighting with small gloves instead of pillows.

Again I don't believe Paton, with his knowledge of the game, could possibly give a draw decision in a fight so one-sided unless there was some sort of an understanding between the principals beforehand. There may have been no understanding at all if there was, it may have been perfectly legitimate, but the spectators should be let in on it, and then there could be no cry of fake afterward.

True Cullen was boring in all the time and some would say he carried the fight to Reilly. He tried to, all right, but Reilly was too fast for him, and when a decision is given on points it must be given to the man who scores and the man who lands, not the man who tries to land. Reilly has a very useful left hand and uses it in jabbing much the same as Jack O'Brien who is probably the greatest jabber the ring has every known.

The decision may have pleased the majority, but to an unbiased spectator it was Reilly's fight by a city block.

SPORT NOTES

Sam Longford has been after Johnson for another go, ever since his fight with Burns, but Johnson don't seem to hear him. Sam should get a megaphone.

Jack O'Brien wants Jeffries to fight him six rounds in Philadelphia. But Jeff doesn't forget an insult. O'Brien once asked Jeffries to lie down for a consideration.

The bids are coming in thick and fast for the Johnson-Jeffries scrap. They range all the way from Australia to Sausalito. One bidder offers a $100,000 purse and a $20,000 bonus to each fighter.

Every big team in America put in a bid for Larry Lajore when it was reported he was for sale. But the Cleveland club says nothing doing.

Now that a series of games have been arranged between the Japs and the Saints, we should see some real live ball playing. The Saints can play ball, but they don't want to hold the Japs too cheap or the latter might slip one over on them.

This afternoon, commencing at 1:30 the Military Athletic Association are holding their first semi-annual field day. There are some fine athletes among the soldier boys, and an afternoon's rare sport will doubtless be enjoyed.

PARADISE PARAGRAPHS

BY WILL SABIN.

Last night, according to economical custom, the street lights were not turned on for the reason that the moon was scheduled to shine. But there was an eclipse and the laugh, for a while, was on the city.

Had it not been for the custom of piling monstrous deckloads on American lumber schooners, Captain Underwood might not have been washed overboard from the schooner Robert Lewers. It would seem that there could be an investigation.

It seems that early this week an unintentional wrong was done to certain prominent people, and to an innocent pig. It was stated in the press that Speaker Holstein sent Senator John Lane a piglet for Thanksgiving eating and that said pig was the cause of much anxiety among the neighbors in the fashionable block bounded by Beretania, Miller, Hotel and Richards streets. The pig was given apartments under the Ena mansion, undergoing process of fattening. A certain unpleasant aroma was observed by the neighbors, the origin of which they were at a loss to explain. When the pig was heard to squeal his appreciation of the good feed he was getting, and it became known that there was actually a pig under the aforementioned domicile, it was not an unnatural mistake to presume that the pig was responsible for the objectionable odor. It develops, however, that the pig was not responsible for the perfume alleged. Since the story appeared, special detectives, with trained noses, were put on the scent and they trailed the guilt to the government stables on the corner of Hotel and Miller streets. These stables are owned and operated by the Territory and constitute an eyesore and an insult to the noses of the neighborhood. Contrary to the requirement that there should be cement floors, there is no such flooring in these government stables and an outrageous fume is the result. Holstein's piglet's pardon should be humbly begged, and the Territory should have the decency to manage its stables in a sanitary manner or else use automobiles.

Two yards long and a fathom high,
Phonograph lungs and a saucy eye;
Jingle Jack, at work or play,
Is the sporting spout of the P. C. A.

And now even the Canaries are loose!

THANKSGIVING.

John Jones was but a tiny man
But, gee! his heart was large.
He'd lost both of his neither limbs
By dynamite discharge.
He married Jane because that she
Was great on "ham-and-eggs."
Besides, the thoughtful little dame,
Was sprightly on her legs.
"I've legs enough for two," she said,
"The otherwise, dear me!"
One of my eyes is made of glass;
But you can see for me."
Now John he wore a tousled wig,
And Jane's teeth weren't her own;
She called her John "Three Finger Jack,"
For two fingers had gone.
Their house burned up, 'twas not insured;
Their sons both went to jail;
Their daughter, dear, when sixteen-year,
Had robbed the U. S. mail.
Rheumatics worried John a bit,
And Jane had asthma bad;
And, yet, on each Thanksgiving Day
They were excessive glad.
For John loved Jane, and Jane loved John,
In good, old-fashioned way,
And thanked the gods with all their hearts
On every blooming day.
John could not kick, he had no legs;
Nor could he tear his hair.
And Jane, with her one lonely eye,
Saw only good and fair.
Her teeth were false, her heart was true;
She loved her legless lord;
And he, by jingo, loved her, too,
No dame was more adored.
They'd everything to be thankful for,
Tho' poor and old and maimed,
For Jane she loved her old man John,
And John he loved his Jane.

Without pausing to apologize to the Puritans for their invention, or to make any extracts from President Taft's Thanksgiving proclamation, let us, my dearly beloved brethren (and sisters) look into the historic whenceness of the origin of Thanksgiving Day. Eve invented it and Adam celebrated it, and the first Thanksgiving Day was when the aforesaid affinities (there's nothing to show that they were legally married) were driven out of Eden. That's what the alleged first folks had to be thankful for; for being driven out of Eden. It was the best thing that ever happened to them, and they knew it. What was the use of staying in Eden? As a matter of fact they couldn't begin to be happy until they were miserable. If they had never been miserable how would they have known that they had ever been happy? Once being miserable, and object in life was former, to wit: Trying to be happy again. In Eden they had nothing to do but be happy and what's the use of being happy when you don't know you're happy? How are you going to find out what happiness is unless you are miserable?

Why, I venture to say that lots of people would never appreciate Honolulu until after it was found that their cash was wrong and they knew then that they couldn't come back without going to jail. It is being driven out of a place or a condition, by force or for the benefit of your health (when the police are on the trail) which makes you want to get back. Hence happiness, trying to be happy!

Yes, when Adam and Eve quit Eden they celebrated the first Thanksgiving Day. They had roast ictyosaurus and applesauce. Then, their eyes being open, having eaten of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil (which corresponds in our modern times to reading a newspaper) they knew what they had to be thankful for. Say, haven't you often stayed up late nights worrying about what you have to be thankful for? Well, Adam was thankful there were no sheath gowns, drop-bucket hats, affinities, or joy-rides; and Eve, dear old girl, was heaped thankful there were no jag-clubs, imitation cocktails, politics, jealous husbands, or Peruna.

But what Adam and Eve had chiefly to be thankful for was the fact that they had no gossiping neighbors after they quit Eden. In Eden he chief objection was the gossiping serpent. There is no more appropriate simile imaginable than that of the serpent and the tell-tale. Only snakes tell.
